A RED HOT PEPPERS PRIMER

The Red Hot Peppers, under the leadership of pianist-composer-entertainer Jelly Roll Morton, was ahead of its time in regards to arranging for a jazz orchestra. This established Morton's musical contributions as a sound foundation for Jazz.

To scale down Jelly Roll Morton’s accomplishments prior to 1926 to a few paragraphs is like attempting to compress a Mount St. Helens eruption with a cork, but here it goes....

Jelly Roll Morton was born Ferdinand Joseph Lamothe on October 20th, 1890 to unwed parents Edward J. Lamothe and Louise Monette. In 1894, Louise married William Mouton and moved with Ferdinand to 1443 Frenchman Street in the Faubourg Marigny section of New Orleans. In 1901, young Ferdinand moved in with his Godmother, Laura Hunter in the Creole section of New Orleans, retaining the surname of his stepfather. While there, he took piano lessons from Rachel Moment after taking up the banjo.

Around 1907, he left home to perform in the "sporting houses", where prostitution and gambling reign, and after hours he, Tony Jackson and other pianists played in all-night cutting contests at the Frenchman's saloon. The following year, Morton began touring with various Vaudeville companies (Billy Kersand's Minstrels, Fred Barrasso, McCabe's Troubadours, and William Benbow among others), and performed on the same bill with, among others, Clarence Williams, Tony Jackson, the Spikes brothers, Curtis Mosby, and Benson Moore, to whom Morton dedicated his composition, Frog-I-More Rag.

In 1910 Morton toured the red light districts along the Gulf coast with a husband and wife team called Mack and Mack. From 1913 through 1914, he put together a musical comedy vaudeville act with girlfriend Rosa Brown. The tour traveled through the Midwest, with one stop at the Standard Theater in Philadelphia.

In the summer of 1914, Morton led his first band at the Pompeii Café in Chicago. In 1915, The Jelly Roll Blues (correct title: Original Jelly Roll Blues) "by Ferd Morton" is published. In 1917, he moved to California, led the "Creole Jazz Band" consisting of Buddy Petit, cornet, Willie Moorehead, trombone, Mack Lewis, clarinet, and Dink Johnson, drums. The band toured the West Coast from 1919 to 1921, concluding at the Paradise Gardens in Los Angeles.

In 1921, with Prohibition and a San Diego cabaret-dancing ban in effect, Morton got a Mexican work visa and performed and resided regularly in Tijuana. In 1922, Morton was manager of the Wayside Amusement Park in Los Angeles, led a band there, and made occasional excursions to Leah's Lake. In 1923, he performed at a benefit for Charles Carleton, an African-American accused of murdering a policeman in Mexico. Because of this incident, Jelly Roll and other entertainers, leave Tijuana for American soil.

In mid 1923, Morton made his first solo and orchestra recordings for the Paramount and Gennett labels and that year he also records Sobbin' Blues with the New Orleans Rhythm Kings. He performed at the Tokio Gardens in South Bend, Indiana in late 1923-early 1924. In 1924, he recorded piano rolls for the Hollywood company in Cincinnati, and recorded King Porter and Tom Cat with King Oliver. He made his radio appearance in 1925 while touring through Louisville, KY. On April 20, 1926, Morton recorded Fat Meat and Greens, King Porter Stomp, and Sweetheart of Mine for Vocalion. In June of that year, he performed at a benefit taking place at the Booker T. Washington Theater in St. Louis. The band performed at the Royal Palais Ballroom in Galena, Illinois in July 1926.

That brings us up to the first Red Hot Peppers recordings. The Victor Talking Machine Company recorded the band at the Webster Hotel Ballroom in Chicago on September 15 and 21, 1926. The company was promoting its new electrical recording process, having introduced the process in November the previous year. The new Orthophonic recordings had an improved sound quality over its acoustic counterparts. The sides Jelly Roll recorded at these sessions were some of his best: Black Bottom Stomp, Deadman's Blues, Grandpa's Spells, Original Jelly Roll Blues, Sidewalk Blues, Smoke House Blues, Someday Sweetheart, and The Chant.

The band personnel Jelly Roll picked came from the King Oliver and Lil Armstrong stables. Cornetist George Mitchell was from Lil Armstrong’s Dreamland Syncopators along with trombonist Kid
Ory, and banjoist Johnny St. Cyr. Ory and St. Cyr were also part of the Louis Armstrong Hot Five. Clarinetist Omer Simeon was a member of Charlie Elgar's Creole Orchestra. Veteran bassist John Lindsay and Doc Cook drummer Andrew Hilaire complimented Morton in the rhythm section. The band was probably the most pure in terms of a collective Jazz ensemble. The band would rehearse with a minimal (if any) amount of music, and Jelly Roll would "coach" the musicians when and where each solo, break or ensemble part was to take place on the recording. The band also, on occasion created an aural theater with recordings like Sidewalk Blues (1926), which opens to an assimilated traffic jam, complete with whistles, car horns, and some verbal abuse from Morton. The car horns continue throughout and conclude the side. Clearly, Jelly never forgot his Vaudeville roots.

Neither Morton nor anyone else ever duplicated the success of the 1926-27 recordings in Chicago. Morton continued recording the Red Hot Peppers until 1930, and despite musicians of the caliber of Henry "Red" Allen and Paul Barbarin, and tunes like the up-tempo Georgia Swing, the spirit and fire of the early Chicago sides was missing.

Jelly Roll Morton, affected by the Great Depression along with many entertainers of the decade, ceased recording after 1930. While continuing to perform at a regular clip, his recording activity declined. Aside from one appearance in 1934, Morton did not appear on record until producer Alan Lomax recorded him in 1938. The Library of Congress recordings, in which Jelly Roll talked, sang and performed, resurrected his career. Not long afterward, Morton led sessions on the Bluebird and General labels.

His disposition had not changed. In 1938, he was involved in a fiery dispute with W.C. Handy over an acknowledgement on the Ripley's Believe It or Not program, claiming Handy was the originator of Jazz and Blues. In 1940, in an interview with Down Beat magazine's George Hoefer, Jr., Morton protested, "Everyone today is playing my stuff and I don't even get credit....Kansas City style, Chicago style, New Orleans style - hell they are all Jelly Roll style!" In response to the ASCAP ban, he formed a short-lived publishing company with Benjamin Spikes, of the Spikes Brothers.

In 1941, with his health declining, he finally succumbed to heart failure on July 10. His work with the Red Hot Peppers proved that Jazz could be structured and arranged, not just be a strictly improvised idiom. With Morton's groundbreaking, bandleaders such as Duke Ellington, Don Redman, and Fletcher Henderson would later build on this foundation, merging written arrangement and improvisation.

QUIZ TIME
By Rabbi Lou Kaplan

This year, 2015, marks the hundredth birthday of the man, now deceased, whom music critic Robert Christgian called "the greatest singer of the 20th century." His record sales exceed 150 million. In October 1944 there were no more seats inside New York City's Paramount Theater for the 35,000 fans outside hoping to see and hear him. Darling of the "bobby soxers" (teenage girls) for his crooning, he won the Best Actor Award in 1955 for his role in "The Man With the Golden Arm." Who else could it be but Francis Albert Sinatra (Dec. 12, 1915-May 14, 1998)?

"Sinatra is best known as a popular singer, but he is nevertheless highly respected in jazz circles, above all for his relaxed and subtle sense of swing." ("The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz," ed. Barry Kernfeld, New York: St. Martin's Press, 1994, p. 1122) He developed and soon flourished during his 1940-1942 stint with Swing Era bandleader Tommy Dorsey. From T.D. he learned much about timing one's breathing, dividing words into phrases, the effect of differing degrees of softness and loudness, as well as overall musical knowledge and sound judgment.

Can you complete the song titles of seven of Sinatra's greatest hits with Tommy Dorsey's band?

1. I'll _____ _____ Again
2. East ___ ___ Sun (___ ___ ___ ___ Moon)
3. The _____ _____ Love (_____ ____ _____ Else)
4. Polka _____ _____ Moonbeams
5. Everything _____ _____ Me
6. This _____ _____ Mine
7. A Sinner _____ _____ Angel
