In 2004, band leader Herb Roselle organized a specially assembled touring band to accompany him on a 10 day excursion to Italy. For this maiden voyage, he selected some of the finest musicians in the area. The band was well received, so they decided to tour again the following year. After a few years of being a onetime/one tour band, the members of the band all decided to stay active and became a permanent fixture in the Cape May, Atlantic & Camden County areas. The Atlantic City Jazz Band was born.

It has been a year since the ACJB performed for Tri-State. Later this month, Herb Roselle and Co. will be performing at a new venue, Covenant Presbyterian Church in Cinnaminson, NJ, a few minutes from the Betsy Ross Bridge and just north of Moorestown.

REVIEW - DAVE WILSON’S RAMPART STREET RAMBLERS

Tex Wyndham (cornet), Drew Nugent (partially hidden, keyboards), Dave Wilson (tenor sax)

The Time: 2:00 p.m. - 5:30 p.m., Sunday, September 19, 2010
The Place: Brooklawn American Legion Hall, Post 72
The Band: Dave Wilson, clarinet, saxes, leader; Tex Wyndham, cornet, piano and vocals; Drew Nugent, trumpet, piano, melodica and vocals; Roger Munnell, trombone, washboard and vocals; John Kovalchik, tuba; Skip Rohrich, drums

With a beautiful September afternoon as a backdrop, Dave Wilson’s Rampart Street Ramblers provided the Jazz for our TSJS members at Brooklawn.

Wilson, who was last seen in TSJS circles with the Canal Street Jazz Band a while ago, assembled a band with familiar faces. Trombonist Roger Munnell and brass bassist John Kovalchik are long standing members of the Tarnished Six. Cornetist/pianist Tex Wyndham, famed leader of the Red Lions and Rent Party Revelers respectively. Finally, from the Midnight Society, trumpeter-pianist Drew Nugent and drummer Skip Rohrich.

Wilson’s Ramblers performed familiar material throughout the afternoon; the most avant-garde selection was a Nugent piano feature, Earl Hines “Rosetta.” There were moments of interest. During “Chinatown, My Chinatown”, Nugent performed a solo on a melodica, a keyboard–wind instrument, similar in sound to Adrian Rollini’s specialty, the goofus. Munnell pulled out all the stops – singing a vocal through a trombone mute, reversing a cup mute to emulate Jack Teagarden’s “water glass” effect, and enjoying a fine workout on the washboard. Kovalchik provided a solid anchor on tuba, providing humor (his deliberate familiar break on “Jazz-Me-Blues” induced a catcall from Munnell) as well as a rock solid rhythmic foundation. Rohrich’s drumming provided the right propulsion for the soloists to take flight.

Special mention should be made to Wyndham, who was responsible for creating most of the stop-time, trading fours sequences and duet pairings. And credit to the rest of the band whom were able to perform these segments on the fly.

As for the leader, Wilson is a capable reed man. With the arsenal of instruments before him, Dave is probably most comfortable on tenor sax, but he did have some inspiring moments on clarinet and the rarely heard sopranino sax.

“Washington and Lee Swing” concluded the festivities of the day, ending with each musician performing a four-bar chorus in succession. The Rampart Street Ramblers left our audience members satisfied. Our next concert will be at a new venue, Covenant Presbyterian Church on Sunday, October 17th at 2:00 p.m. with The Atlantic City Jazz Band. See you then.

RECALLING MUSIC OF THE PAST

The cover of RECORD RESEARCH for February 1974 carried a note from Christopher W. White, Director: The Rutgers Institute of Jazz Studies at Newark, NJ is a large archive of records, scholars’ files, books, periodicals, films, and memorabilia. Although the emphasis is on jazz, the collection does include representative samples of pre-jazz African-American, African, Caribbean and jazz influenced American recordings and other materials.

The Institute was founded by Marshall Stearns in the early 1950’s and was transferred to Rutgers University’s Newark Campus in 1966. The Institute has always attempted to remain in the vanguard of scholarship in American music by presenting innovative conferences and symposia. The sixth annual conference on discographical studies this year to be held on the Douglas Campus in New Brunswick, NJ, and the symposium of sociological research of 1970 are two examples of the objectives. In addition, the Institute has on a limited basis stimulated the support of the creators of this music by presenting experimental performance formats; “Jazz – The Personal Dimension”, a chamber concert series held in several New Jersey campuses and at the Carnegie Recital Hall, Expo 67, and Black on Black, a concert series that attempted to examine the retention of Africanisms in jazz, are all projects that were designed to accomplish this objective. The Pee Wee Russell Memorial Scholarship Fund, an endowment to Rutgers University by the New Jersey Jazz Society, has come about largely as a result of interlocking associations between that organization and the Institute.

Moreover, the Institute has attempted to stimulate interest in jazz by educational institutions through the presentation of lecture demonstration concerts in the Newark public school system and, more recently, by participating in an Artist in the School project that brought four prominent performers to 36 New Jersey High Schools to teach improvisation.

I view the collaboration with the Institute of Pan African Culture in the organization of this year’s activities as an example of our organic growth, a factor that has been paramount in the evolution of the music and I’m sure an important step forward for us. Moreover, our association with other organizations such as Festival Productions (The Newport Jazz Festival) and the Rodgers and Hammerstein Collection, the New York Public Library, which generously provided physical facilities, are further steps toward the goal of realizing the ultimate objectives of the Institute of Jazz Studies “without walls”. This year’s program is
AN INTRODUCTION TO EDDIE LANG

The city of Philadelphia has mostly been overlooked for its contributions to early Jazz. It was home to the Standard Theater on South Street where in 1927 Duke Ellington and his Washingtonians received a job offer to headline the Cotton Club. Nearby Chester native Ethel Waters got her start here, and Frank Fairfax led an orchestra in the 1930s which spawned careers of Dizzy Gillespie, Bill Doggett and others. For home grown talent, however, the “city of brotherly love” was the birthplace of Salvatore Massaro and Giuseppe Venuti, better known as Eddie Lang and Joe Venuti.

Lang and Venuti were childhood friends in the Italian section of South Philadelphia. Lang was born on October 25, 1902; Venuti in September the following year. Lang’s father was an instrument maker, and the two often practiced on custom made string instruments. In addition to the guitar, Lang was also proficient on violin and viola. The duo performed in many local venues before extending beyond the Philadelphia region.

In 1923, Lang made his appearance on record, and the following year, toured with Red McKenzie’s Mound City Blue Blowers in Europe. Venuti, in 1924, joined the Jean Goldkette orchestra. Lang would soon follow. The Goldkette orchestra in the 1920s, with Bix Beiderbecke on cornet, Frank Trumbauer, Jimmy Dorsey on reeds, Bill Rank on trombone, and Bill Challis’ arrangements, left an indelible impression on fellow musicians. The high water mark for Goldkette’s organization was the 1926 band battle against Fletcher Henderson’s band at the Roseland Ballroom.

Outside of his partnership with Venuti, Lang was quite prolific in the recording studios. His solo recordings and his ground-breaking duets with guitarist Lonnie Johnson come to mind. Also noteworthy was his sensitive accompaniment to Beiderbecke and Trumbauer on “Singin’ The Blues” (1927) and buoying the solo efforts of Louis Armstrong, Jack Teagarden et al on “Knockin’ A Jug” (1929). Blues singers sought Lang’s accompaniment, among them Bessie Smith, Victoria Spivey, Gladys Bentley, and Texas Alexander.

A salary dispute in 1927 caused most of the Goldkette sidemen to leave the band. Lang and Venuti (along with Bix and Tram) joined Adrian Rollini for a brief, ill-fated venture. Then, Paul Whiteman eventually hired most of Goldkette’s musicians. Whiteman’s orchestra, like Goldkette, was not a Jazz orchestra, but a venue for popular music of the time. It was his attractive salaries, not musical challenges that attracted jazzmen into the fold.

Lang and Venuti were among the last of Goldkette’s sideman to join Whiteman. The highlight of this brief union (1929-1930) transpired in the film “King Of Jazz” (1930) where Lang and Venuti appeared, performing an abridged version of one of their original compositions, “Wild Cat.”

It was during his tenure with Whiteman where Lang struck up a partnership with crooner Bing Crosby. When Crosby left for Hollywood in the early 1930’s, he requested Lang to be his

accompanist. With the success of the “Big Broadcast” (1932), financial stability for both men seemed secure at an unstable time. For Lang, it was not to last. Prior to embarking on a return trip to Hollywood, Lang died from complications resulting from a tonsillectomy on March 26, 1933.

His work on guitar influenced future generations of musicians, yet Lang himself had little if any foundation to apply to his playing. He was the first guitarist to develop the rhythm technique eventually used by all guitar players in big bands. Eddie was also the first to develop improvising techniques that allowed guitar players taking hot solos in large swing ensembles. The man revolutionized Jazz guitar. – George Hunt & Jim McGann
